

Auto-Pilot (Est 1995)

Adrian Collier - Vocals, synthesisers, programming, guitars, bass

Shaun Herbert - Synthesisers, samples, DJ, mix

In the early 90's there existed a strange electro rock group from Barnsley, UK. This 5 piece band 'The Fokker Pilots' centred on the writings of one Adrian Collier and the technology surrounding one Shaun Herbert. Touring a sound that followed no 'in crowd' of the time proved to be too much for some and inevitably the collapse in 1995 gave birth to the leaner and ever evolving Auto-Pilot.

"It's the love of making music without being tied to any one genre", a philosophy and motto that's rarely adopted by musicians, probably through fear of the unknown or maybe simply a feeling of being safe in the box. The Pilot's are most definitely out of their box (in more ways than one would expect) and this attitude reflects in the evolution of sound, as it echoes down the years. Their style is purposefully ever evolving, morphing with innovation due to their refreshing and open willingness towards new ventures, friendships and collaborations whilst keeping that ambient core.

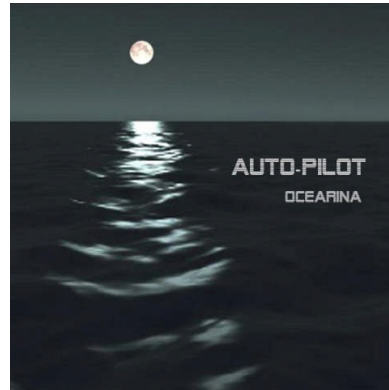

Over the years, Auto-Pilot music has been put out with various labels and publishers but in 2009, own label '9 Volt Records' was born as a place they call base camp. Expeditions do continue seeking out collaborations with other labels and publishers. New release 'The Atlantic Machine' is one such venture, releasing in unison with German netlabel Broque records.
